ICCO Symposium: Growing Global Executives: Feedback and Coaching Practices in a Multi-Cultural Economy: Thursday, June 17th and Friday, June 18th, 2010

Hosted by: Experian Americas

Costa Mesa, California.

In today's fast-paced and precarious economy, how can we accelerate the learning process for our up-and-coming executives around the world? As organizations, we need these leaders to be nimble enough to cope with worldwide change; as coaches, we want to give them the best tools to make complex decisions and move effectively between tactics and strategy. Since nobody "is born global," many leaders fail when they move from the local to the global stage. We want to set them up for success. This symposium will generate ideas, senior-level discussion and future actions to do just that, including growing executives' capacity to deal with challenges such as the global financial crisis.

One of the most important tools for coaches to help leaders grow and develop is feedback - effectively gathering data and giving /getting suggestions for improved performance. Feedback (e.g. 360° processes) can misfire if practitioners are not skillful and also sensitive to cultural norms.

Join ICCO for this intimate forum that brings all the stakeholders of coaching in organizations together to explore and teach each other how to help leaders be more successful on the larger stage.

Register here to attend and possibly to present a relevant case study, thus receiving exceptional consulting value for your organization. We are actively seeking ideas--the sooner the better--for case studies. As this topic is already generating responses, please get in touch now to discuss your proposed case study with the team leader, Linda Shaffer-Vanaria at ecc@adnc.com or Kevin Cuthbert at kcuthbert@karlinsloan.com. Don't wait to register—as always, participation is limited to 30.
